I'm trying to get a program written with Clipper 5.2e to compile and run with Clipper 5.3b. The problem I'm running into is the fact that the application uses libraries, some of which are not working well in Clipper 5.3b. One of these libraries is Grumpfish. From what I've seen, there is a patch for the library when using Clipper 5.3.

The overwhelming difference between Clipper 5 arrays and those of other xBase languages, is the flexibility that Clipper 's arrays give developers. Clipper arrays may assume any "topology" that makes sense for the problem being solved. This means that in Clipper, more than just the standard n-dimensional array can be represented.

If the reference to idVar is ambiguous (i.e., not declared at compile time and not explicitly qualified with an alias), idVar is always assumed to be MEMVAR. At runtime, if no private or public variable exists with the specified name, a private variable is created. To assign a field variable with the = operator, you must declare the field variable name in a FIELD statement or refer to the field ...
