The Elephant Who Wants to Fall Asleep

Wild African elephants may break sleep records for mammals. New data show that they seem to get by just fine on about two hours of shut-eye a night. Much of that snoozing took place while they were standing up. The animals lie down to sleep only once every three to four nights.

Wild elephants sleep for only two hours at night | Science ...

The female elephants live in a family unit, also called a herd, of up to 25 elephants with a female elephant in the lead. There is a clear hierarchy usually based on age and experience, so the older the elephant is, the stronger their influence is in the herd. Male elephants, however, usually leave their family between the age of eight and 15.
